

Call for entries: 3rd annual short essay competition for Canadian dermatology residents

Derm.city is pleased to announce the 3rd annual short essay competition on the topic of Inclusivity, Diversity and Equity in Dermatology. The contest is open to any qualified resident enrolled in a dermatology training program at a Canadian medical school.

This essay competition is organized by the Dermatology Industry Taskforce on Inclusion, Diversity and Equity (DiTiDE), an unincorporated, "ad hoc" committee consisting of Canadian life sciences managers and executives, physicians, and allied parties who are committed to improving the patient experience and outcomes of underrepresented skin types in Canadian Dermatology, through physician education, resources, and industry support. Due date: November 15th, 2024

To enter, applicants should write and submit an original short (350 to 500 words) essay on a topic of your choice relating to skin of colour and Inclusivity, Diversity and Equity in Dermatology. The essay could be about observations made during your medical training, your personal experience, or be aspirational regarding improved dermatologic care for these members of Canadian society. Entries may be submitted in French or English.

Six finalists will be selected, with each finalist receiving a dermatology textbook prize (digital or print), publication of the winning entries on the derm.city website and in the print journal The Chronicle of Skin & Allergy, plus additional benefits to be announced.

All submissions to the competition must include:
